Liesel's Weather Reports

Max Vandenburg, the Jew hidden in the Hubermann's basement, cannot go outside to see the kinds of days that are passing by; therefore, he asks Liesel to describe the day to him:

Instead of giving facts like the specific temperature or obvious remarks about the day, Liesel uses figurative language to present Max with a more vivid description of the weather.

You are going to continue to practice figurative language and color symbolism by presenting your own weather report.

Instructions:

1. Google today's weather report in a different town (can be in Wisconsin, the U.S., or another country)
2. Use figurative language to explain what the day looks/feels like (similar to what Liesel did for Max). In other words, describe the weather using a metaphor, simile, and/or personification and write this "report" on the backside of this page
3. Then to illustrate the day as you reported it, draw a symbolic picture
